When director Nanfu Wang moves to the U.S., a birthday trip to Florida leads her to a chance encounter with a life-changing drifter. Intrigued by his livelihood of chosen homelessness, she accompanies 22-year-old Dylan on the streets to experience eating from the garbage, sleeping in the park, and observing complete strangers' fascination with Dylan's mission and unprompted willingness to give him a helping hand. As a Chinese native, Nanfu always admired the storied symbol of freedom America represents and the power its people have to create their own futures. She witnesses that spirit in her shoeless companion, who is fearless of consequences and content living as a citizen of the world. Over time, she discovers Dylan's care-free, wanderlust motives are riddled with layers of rebellion, vices, and inner demons he can no longer suppress. I AM ANOTHER YOU offers a unique perspective of life outside the norm and sheds encouraging light on the power of human connection. —A.B.

When Angelina arrives at a healing-focused ayahuasca retreat in the dense jungles of Peru, Arturo (one of the resident shamans) determines she's experiencing "susto," or "the disease of fear." Angelina has a valid excuse, however: she is battling cancer and has traveled thousands of miles in search of a nontraditional salve. As ICAROS: A VISION progresses, Angelina strikes up a friendship with Arturo, who has been diagnosed with a degenerative eye disease. Together they face down an uncertain future by learning how to tame the spiritual chaos that often prevents enlightenment. Filmed on location in the Amazon jungle with many non-actors in leading roles, ICAROS: A VISION is a disorienting and immersive movie crafted to resemble the mind-fracturing illumination of a psychedelic ayahuasca trip. But by blending fantasy and reality, sobriety and hallucination, the film also provides beautiful (and, occasionally, unsettling) insights into what people discover when forced outside of their comfort zone. (In English and Spanish with subtitles) —A.Z.
