Life changed very abruptly for Will Lautzenhauser. A promising filmmaker and teacher, Will became a quadriplegic after sudden, unexplained septic shock. STUMPED is the amazing story of the years between amputation and the promise of a double-arm transplant. Don't skip to the next film synopsis (yes, you!). This is not a depressing film you want to avoid. This is an uncompromising look at an uncompromising man. From doing comedy routines about his amputations at a local comedy club to posing for calendars, Will is not your give-up sort of man. With the love of his partner Angel, his twin brother Tom, and a team of surgeons who should all be wearing wings, STUMPED is a film that grips you on levels you may have forgotten you have. Unflinching and darkly humorous, this documentary is about the ability to triumph and crack jokes while doing so. You will wince, laugh, and cheer. You will certainly cry. You will also leave with a deeper understanding of the meaning of victory. —C.R.

The mental image of a world-class powerlifter isn't typically a ten-year-old Orthodox Jewish girl from New Jersey. Nevertheless, Naomi Kutin is "Supergirl." As an eight-year-old karate stand-out, Naomi had an extraordinary strength within her, unmatched by anyone else her age. Recognizing this, her father introduced her to powerlifting, a sport he had pursued for more than 30 years making it the lifeblood of the family. At just 97 pounds, Naomi was fierce, unstoppable... and setting and breaking her own world records all before the eighth grade. But when her fearless, unshakable "Supergirl" ego lies dormant, Naomi's awkward, uncertain sense of self kicks in, leaving her vulnerable to online criticisms of her superhuman strength, body image issues, and the inescapable growing pains of puberty. Marked by a coming-of-age bat mitzvah, SUPERGIRL bends the rules of expectations for young girls everywhere. Consider this one less glass ceiling to be shattered. —A.B.
